MISTAKEN CHARITY.

Kalamazoo, Michigan, will be a mecca for all tramps of the country hereafter. This is because a Kalamazoo woman, Mrs. Almira Kramer, has just died, leaving $10,000 to be put out at interest, the income to be used in feeding the gentlemen of the road. Now let the glad news be disseminated among the tramp fraternity. Let the word be passed along that in Kalamazoo they will be fed copiously without money and without price; and, what is more to the point, without work.

The people of Kalamazoo are naturally much concerned about the bequest. They don't want their town to become a tramp haven but they don't see any way to avoid it. The money with which to feed the bums is there and the bums know it is there. They will surely loose no time in claiming their town, whether Kalamazoo likes it or not. Mrs. Kramer's charity is sure to prove a considerable nuisance to Kalamazoo.

It is a mistaken charity. This notion of feeding every tramp that comes along and asks for food has been much overworked. Some people pride themselves on the fact that they never turn a professedly hungry man away unfed. They think they are nobly generous, that they are philanthropists, that they are casting upon the waters bread that may after a long time return to them. They think that all comers must be fed is a foolish one. We don't believe in turning hungry men away hungry, but we do believe that they should be made to pay in work, at least, for their food.

No man who is really hungry, and we speak now of the able bodied only, will refuse to do some work in exchange for some food. No man able to work, should be permitted to eat without working. It is the indiscriminate feeding of tramps by housekeepers that has built up the great army of bums in the United States. There are thousands of them tramping across and up and down the country. They ride in freight cars, on brake beams, they even walk when they can't steel a ride.

But they never work, for they are always sure of finding some soft-hearted individual who will feed them. A general movement for requiring tramps to work before they eat would have the effect of thinning out that army in a little while.
